Canadians setting sail for Gaza

Blockade began in '07 with Israel stopping trade in, out of Gaza, leading to supply shortage

PHOEBE HO
TORONTO@METRONEWS.CA

A group of Canadians set off from Pearson airport yesterday to join an international flotilla in an effort to break Israel's blockade of Gaza.

The Canadian ship Tahrir, one of 10 vessels sailing in Freedom Flotilla II, is expected to carry 33 civil society delegates, politicians, journalists, artists, peace and human rights activists, and small business owners to protest the blockade and bring medical aid to Gaza.

With more than 1,000 civilians participating in the flotilla, Lyn Adamson said she hopes to put an end to the blockade through citizen action.

"It isn't about them. It isn't about Israel. It's about the people in Gaza. They need the aid and they need to be able to use their harbour," said Adamson, co-chair of Canadian Voice of Women for Peace.

"People are just not getting enough. They're not able to build the economy and they're drinking from contaminated water because the infrastructure has not been rebuilt."

In May 2010, the first Freedom Flotilla set off to Gaza with seven vessels carrying nearly 700 passengers. Israeli commandos boarded the boats, leading to a confrontation that left nine passengers dead and more than 50 injured.

John Greyson, a Toronto filmmaker boarding Freedom Flotilla II, said there is a wide range of possible outcomes in this mission.

"The worst-case scenario — which we don't even need to say — to the best-case scenario, which is that we're allowed to, as the international law says, to sail into the port," Greyson said.

THE ESKANS ARE A FRIENDLY AND WELCOMING PEOPLE.

HEY! WHERE'D THAT BLOW DART COME FROM?

They never conquered or fought battles, yet throughout history they were feared by many. The ESKAN Warriors. For over 8000 years their sole purpose here? Protecting the purity of ESKA Natural Spring Water.

Now you're probably thinking, "What kind of chump do you take me for? Bottled water hasn't been around for 8000 years." That's absolutely true (not the part about taking you for some kind of chump, the part about bottled water).

As legend has it, ESKAN Warriors have been protecting the purity of our water long before we started to bottle it. The fact is, over the centuries anytime someone attempted to disrupt our water's purity, arrows, spears and poisonous darts would make an unwelcomed appearance.

So why on earth do these ancient warriors let us bottle their oh-so-very precious water?

Simple. We don't mess with it. We don't demineralize, deionize, distill or d-anything for that matter. There's no chemical processing, added chlorine or oxidants. And since ESKA is untouched by man, and bottled right at the source, its natural purity remains intact.

Which brings us to our most useful point. The one that may well save your life. Bottom line? Don't mess with the purity of ESKA! Don't mix it, spill it, or even look at it funny. For if you do, you'll undoubtedly face some very pointy obstacles from a nearby ESKAN Warrior.

Agencies blast feds' rating system

Two immigration groups lost about $500,000 each in federal funds, despite their passing marks on applications Groups say they were not given opportunity to respond

Two Toronto immigrant agencies were given passing marks on their grant applications by two out of three assessors, but still lost their federal funding, documents obtained by the Toronto Star show.

The South Asian Women's Centre, established in 1982, lost its bid for $693,000 — the majority of its overall funding — from Ottawa on April 1 and has been forced to cut services and close satellite offices. It served 14,000 clients in 2010. The Davenport-Perth Neighbourhood Centre, a multi-service agency in existence since 1985, was denied $426,000 it sought for family settlement services.

The two agencies were among some 34 Ontario organizations — 14 in Toronto — that lost federal funding when Citizenship and Immigration Canada cut $43 million in settlement services in Ontario this year. The groups typically deliver language, employment and integration programs to newcomers.

According to documents obtained under the Access to Information Act, funding proposals submitted by the South Asian Women's Centre and Davenport-Perth Neighbourhood Centre were each reviewed by three immigration officers.

In both cases, two assessors gave the funding requests a score above the passing mark of 105, while a third evaluator failed them.

"This is absolutely unfair," said Kripa Sekhar, executive director of the women's centre. She said the agency, which was forced to lay off seven workers, repeatedly requested information, without success, on how the funding decision was reached.

Immigration spokesperson Tracie LeBlanc said agencies were informed of the decision-making process. "While an organization may have received a 'pass,' this does not imply CIC made the final decision to provide funding," she wrote in an email.

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Pass or fail

Immigration spokesperson Tracie LeBlanc said both agencies needed a third assessment by managers because staff was split in their decision.

- Funding was rejected "based on a number of factors, including their overall assessment scores and feasibility rankings. Both organizations received a 'D' feasibility rank," LeBlanc said.

Filmmaker's anxiety inspires flotilla doc

The violence that took place last year on board a flotilla to Gaza spurred Toronto filmmaker John Greyson to sign up for Freedom Flotilla II.

"What happened last year, it was such an outrage," said Greyson. "I think that was the motivation for me this year to become more involved."

Greyson took part in creating a video about the first Freedom Flotilla last year, and has since been involved in the cause.

"It's intimidating, it's nervous-making going on this," said Greyson. To keep busy, he created a short video on YouTube calling for support of the flotilla.

"It was sort of my coping strategy."

Aside from alleviating his anxiety prior to the mission, he said the purpose of the film was to "draw a picture of participants involved in Freedom Flotilla II, this cross-section of Canadians, really ordinary Canadians who come from all walks of life and really want to make a difference."

Greyson has created numerous fictional and documentary films over the last three decades, including Zero Patience, Lilies, and Fig Trees. PHOEBE HO/FOR METRO

Stern warning

Israel has vowed to prevent the flotilla from docking.

- Yesterday, an Israel navy commander extended a stern warning to organizers.
- "The navy has prevented and will continue to prevent the arrival of the 'hate flotilla' whose only goals are to clash with (Israel defence forces) soldiers, create media provocation and to delegitimize the state of Israel," Admiral Eliezer Marom said during a graduation ceremony of members of Israel's navy, according to the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz.
- Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird has called the convoy "provocative."
- About a dozen members of the Jewish Defence League turned up at Pearson to criticize the international flotilla. They carried posters saying, "Gaza Flotilla: Ship of Fools" and "Stop the Fauxtilla Propaganda."

Diehard fans wait long hours for MMVAs

Some fans had slipped into sleeping bags and were taking naps on the sidewalk while waiting for the MuchMusic Video Awards

TORONTO@METRONEWS.CA

For serious fans, waiting 14 hours on a dusty street corner is a small price to pay for a glimpse of Lady Gaga.

By 5:30 a.m. yesterday, Kayla Mitchell, Hillary Forsythe, Sam Hatoski, Natalie MacCabe and Emily Wild were already perched on bright red camping chairs, waiting in line for the MuchMusic Video Awards (MMVAs). Last week, the girls camped out for nearly two days to get wristbands allowing them access to the awards.

The five friends from Hamilton were especially eager to see Lady Gaga, Bruno Mars and Down With Webster perform.

"I'm hoping Biebs will show up, too," said Forsythe.

Mitchell, Hatoski and MacCabe have made a tradition out of the MMVAs and have attended every show for the past three years. Forsythe was there for the first time, even though she had to write her most difficult Grade 12 exam the following morning.

"It's worth the wait and the trouble. It's so much fun," said Mitchell, who noted the only downside had been the $50 parking fee they had to pay for the day.

MARIANA IONOVA/FOR METRO

▶ Fan Janay Simpson, who started getting ready for the show at 2 a.m.

Janay Simpson, Marcie Fletcher and Devonte MacGlashan started lining up for the MMVAs even earlier, driving in from Oshawa at 4 a.m. yesterday and getting the 42nd spot in line.

"I started getting ready at two in the morning for this," said Simpson, whose eyes, lips and cheeks were covered in silver makeup and jewels. "We were some of the first people to show up."

Others were killing time by playing card games, decorating T-shirts and chanting song lyrics. The odour coming from a garbage truck parked a few feet away from the line didn't seem to affect the enthusiastic crowd.

The line wound around the corner, where fans were shielding themselves from the afternoon sun with umbrellas and posters.

PCBs continue to languish in west-end dump

Hidden from sight in the back of a west Toronto parking lot is a 22,000-tonne pile of poisonous waste that, by law, must be destroyed by the end of this year.

But Schneider Electric, owners of the largest PCB dump site in the province, say it is unlikely to destroy the toxins sitting on its property by the time a federally imposed deadline comes and goes Dec. 31.

The company has known it would have to get rid of the PCBs since 2008.

After three years, and a deadline extension, Schneider is only now consulting the community about how best to do it.

It sent out letters to residents in the community earlier this month advising them of the situation, and are now asking them to provide input on disposing of the PCBs.

Woman stabbed in head, police say

A 50-year-old Toronto man is charged with stabbing his ex-girlfriend in the head early yesterday morning.

Police say the 39-year-old woman had just returned to her home in the Dufferin Street and Lawrence Avenue West area about 2 a.m. when she was attacked at her door.

She was stabbed once on the top of the head and was treated and released from hospital. The man is charged with attempted murder, aggravated assault and assault with a weapon.

Two drown in separate incidents

A Toronto teenager has died after being pulled from a pond at a Mennonite camp near Stratford.

Hours later, in a separate incident, a 21-year-old Mississauga man died while swimming at a trailer park and resort in Port Colborne.

The Toronto teen, 14-year-old Malcolm Gyamfi, was swimming with a group of young people just after 4 p.m. Saturday at Hidden Acres Mennonite Camp.

Some members of the group went beyond the roped-off area into deeper water and the teen disappeared under the surface.

Firefighters pulled him from the water.

Gyamfi was taken to Stratford General Hospital and then to London's Victoria Hospital where he died about 11 p.m. Saturday.

The second incident occurred at about 9 p.m. Saturday in Port Colborne, when four visitors at a resort went swimming in an inland body of water, Niagara Regional Police say.

Police say the 21-year-old man jumped into the water from a height of up to six metres, surfaced and was talking with his companions.

But a short time later, he slipped beneath the water and did not resurface.

His friends tried but were unable to find him. His body was found at 12:40 a.m. yesterday by police divers.

PARTY CONVENTION

NDP mulls options

New Democrats aren't sure if they're still socialists or if they might want to merge with the Liberals one day.

Following heated debates, they kept their options open on both matters Sunday as the NDP wrapped up a three-day convention that marked the party's 50th anniversary.

For many New Democrats, the failure to firmly define themselves was an indication the party is determined to broaden its appeal without alienating its old-time base.

And they avoided a potential schism in their own ranks by deferring a vote on a controversial proposal to excise the word "socialist" from the preamble to the NDP constitution.

Jack Layton

NDP Leader Jack Layton — whose leadership was endorsed by an overwhelming 97.9 per cent of delegates — played down the significance of both issues.

Smartphones track your every move

Dangers of automatically collecting personal data from mobile devices will only increase as technology evolves, privacy commissioner warns

There are unintended consequences of having our smartphones and other wireless devices automatically collect data on our whereabouts, warns Ontario information and privacy commissioner Ann Cavoukian.

Privacy should be designed into cellphones and Wi-Fi systems to prevent the automatic collection and storage of personal data by the devices, which only continue to grow in popularity, Cavoukian said in a special report.

Most people had no idea their location and other data were being recorded and compiled until Apple recently said its iPhone 4 tracked and stored phone location data on the user's home computers, without the user's knowledge, she said.

"We're getting a lot more interest in the notion of embedding privacy as a default feature in the design of technology as they're being designed, so it's not an afterthought," Cavoukian said in an interview. "Whenever you have incidents like this with Apple, it's a wake-up call for the rest of the industry that they've got to get serious about this."

There is a lot of concern about the capability of mobile systems to track our lives, without our knowledge, concludes Cavoukian's report, "Wi-Fi Positioning Systems: Beware of Unintended Consequences," which was jointly written with Microsoft's former chief architect of identity, Kim Cameron.

"It is no wonder that smartphone researchers state that today's smartphone operating systems frequently fail to provide users with adequate control over and visibility into how third-party applications use their private data," concludes the report.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Privacy by design

- Making privacy a default feature on mobile devices can protect people from unknowingly sending out personal information, said privacy commissioner Ann Cavoukian.
- "Privacy by design is now the international standard for privacy and should be considered at the outset," she wrote. "Technologists will save a lot of trouble if they make their mobile location systems conform with reasonable expectations of privacy and security, starting now."

NATO choppers attack field as Canadian troops exit Afghan town

The road to Zangabad, Afghanistan, is lined with graves and for many years was littered with mines, but for Canadian troops it is now memory lane.

The place they fought hard for over so many years, a place they occupied for the first time last fall, was quietly handed over to the Americans yesterday as the withdrawal of the Canadian army from Kandahar hit full stride.

Alpha Company 1st Battalion Royal 22e Regiment, which rolled into the notorious Taliban redoubt as part of NATO's major offensive last year, pulled back to Kandahar Airfield as a first step on the long journey home.

"Au revoir, Zangabad," the radio crackled yesterday morning as the last Canadian light armoured vehicles rolled out the gate of the region's main forward operating base.

It's also been called "Zanga-not-so-bad" when compared with even wilder communities, such as Mushan to the west.

"There is real a sense of accomplishment," said Maj. Pierre Leroux, the company commander, shortly after the Canadian flag was hauled down at the base. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Rich bride, poor bride — both overspending in Afghanistan: Ministry

- Government wants to curb expensive wedding trends
- Under Taliban rule, lavish ceremonies were forbidden

Some brides in Afghanistan change their outfits up to 10 times.

Throw in the six-hour trips to the beauty parlours and the meals for 1,000 guests — and one wedding alone could bankrupt many Afghans.

Now, the justice ministry is proposing limits on the lavish events to cut down on the pressure poor Afghans face to match the elite's elaborate weddings. The government is specifically targeting party halls — and threatening to fine owners who flout the austerity rules.

"It is breaking the back of the groom and of the family," Justice Minister Habibullah Ghaleb said of the lavish nuptials. "It creates an immoral corruption."

The rules are also aimed at protecting grooms' families from spending too much money on gifts, with brides only being allowed to receive two dresses — one for an engagement party and one for the wedding.

Under the proposed wedding law, which still needs to be passed by parliament, locations would be barred from allowing more than 300 attendees for an engagement party and more than 500 people at a wedding, Ghaleb said.

Those halls caught breaking the law would be subject to serious fines or other possible penalties. However, it remains unclear what enforcement powers authorities would have to go after the wedding halls, especially in a country where bribery remains common.

"We don't want to put pressure on the people," the minister said. "We want to put pressure on the wedding halls."

Japan nuclear plant wasn't prepared: Report

Disaster drill held a week before tsunami apparently didn't aid workers

A new report says Japan's tsunami-ravaged nuclear plant was so unprepared for the disaster that workers had to bring protective gear and an emergency manual from distant buildings and borrow equipment from a contractor.

The report, released Saturday by plant operator Tokyo Electric Power Co., is based on interviews of workers and plant data. It portrays chaos amid the desperate and ultimately unsuccessful battle to protect the Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant from meltdown, and shows that workers struggled with unfamiliar equipment and fear of radiation exposure.

The March 11 earthquake and tsunami destroyed the plant's power and crucial cooling systems, causing three reactor cores to melt and causing several explosions.

TEPCO has been criticized for dragging its feet on venting and sea-water cooling — the two crucial steps experts say could have mitigated the damage.

Tokyo Electric Power Co. officials have said the tsunami created obstacles that were impossible to anticipate. An investigation by an independent panel is pending.

Content providers plead for fairness

Customers limited by content monopolies Room needed to compete in a market ruled by big players

With more and more TV content in Canada being delivered online through mobile devices like smartphones and tablets, Canadian regulators are opening hearings this week on possible measures to ensure a level field for service providers.

New wireless company Public Mobile will appear before the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission in Gatineau, Que., today to make its case for fairness in a field dominated by major players such as Shaw Communications Inc. and BCE, which own most of the country's television broadcasting assets.

JAE C. HONG/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ In recent years, much of Canada's private broadcasting sector has been swallowed up by a handful of big communications companies.

"There's a role for the regulator in ensuring small independent services are protected from predatory behaviour," said Ian Morrison, of Friends of Canadian Broadcasting.

Some regulatory safeguards are necessary to protect consumers, said Ken Engelhart, Rogers' senior vice-president of regulatory matters.

Content should not be exclusive for companies that own broadcast and distribution assets because it limits consumers' choices, he said.

LIA GRAINGER/FOR METRO

▶ Longboard Living owner Ryan Rubin outside of his shop.

ALL ABOUT SPREADING 'THE STOKE'

URBAN COMPASS

LIA GRAINGER
METRO TORONTO

It's Thursday night at Kensington Market's Longboard Living, and that means one thing: It's time for some traffic surfing. It's nearly 8 p.m., and one by one, lanky young men roll up and congregate outside the graffiti-covered shop that sells their preferred mode of transportation: The longboard. In a few minutes, this pack of helmeted travellers will traverse the city, ripping and weaving down quiet side streets, main thoroughfares, through traffic, until it's too dark to see.

"Longboarding is experiencing a surge in popularity," says Ryan Rubin, the 25-year-old leader of this motley assortment of young men. He should know — he has opened two longboarding shops in Kensington Market since March.

For Rubin, the love affair with this niche boarding subculture started a decade ago when he got his first longboard — essentially a longer skateboard, ideal for cruising city streets. He was instantly enamoured with the smooth ride his board provided.

"It's surf-inspired island living in your daily Toronto commute," says Rubin.

Yet he laments the lack of community around the sport: "There was no culture at that time, no encouragement."

Slowly, he has seen that change. "I'd be cruising around the Annex, and people would stop me and say, 'Where do you get a board like that?'" says Rubin. "Eventually, I started saying, 'You get it from me.'"

What started as a word-of-mouth shop in a friend's basement in 2008 is now two stores stocked with everything a budding longboarding enthusiast could want, from helmets and kneepads to decks from across North America.

The shops are thriving, but for Rubin, it's the sense of community surrounding the sport that is his prime motivation. It's the reason he hosts free surf sessions four times a week: Tuesdays there are free lessons, Wednesdays is side street surfing, Thursdays is traffic surfing, and Sunday there's a special session that's just for the ladies. Some sessions draw close to 40 boarders.

"I want to be able to share this lifestyle with as many people as possible," says Rubin, and then throws in some longboarding lingo: "It's all about spreading the stoke."

Worth mentioning

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates. A Saudi woman defiantly drove through the nation's capital while others brazenly cruised by police patrols in the first forays of a campaign that hopes to ignite a road rebellion against the male-only driving rules in the ultraconservative kingdom.

It was a rare grassroots challenge to the Western-backed Saudi monarchy as it tries to ride out the Arab world's wave of change, and a lesson in how the uprisings are taking root in different ways. In this case, the driver's seat was turned into a powerful platform for women's rights Friday in a country where women have almost no political voice.

"We've seen that change is possible," said Maha al-Qahtani. She said she drove for 45 minutes around the capital, Riyadh, with her husband in the passenger seat. "This is Saudi women saying, 'This is our time to make a change.'"

About 40 women took part in Friday's show of defiance. No arrests or violence were reported, though al-Qahtani was later ticketed for driving without a licence.

Freeloaders not allowed in space

The billionaire businessman behind Virgin Galactic says William Shatner, and other celebrities, shouldn't expect any free rides into space.

The space tourism enterprise is already taking reservations for flights, which could begin next year.

But it's become clear that the actor who played Captain James T. Kirk, perhaps the world's most famous fictional spaceman, is not among the 440 people from 40 countries planning to go up.

"William Shatner has said that he's scared to go into space and it's quite ironic really when you think of his career," company founder Sir Richard Branson told The Canadian Press. "And, like most celebrities, he would like a freebie."

The cost of a seat is $200,000 US.

The 80-year-old actor recently admitted he did not want to boldly go anywhere beyond the Earth's atmosphere.

Branson suggested the Star Trek actor is in the minority. "Most people are unlike William Shatner. I would say nine out of 10 people — if they could afford it — would love to go into space." THE CANADIAN PRESS

All that glitters at MMVAs

Co-host Selena Gomez and boyfriend Justin Bieber steal show
Performers include Avril Lavigne, Bruno Mars, Simple Plan

Justin Bieber shocked his shrieking fans by appearing at the MuchMusic Video Awards last night — and he didn't have to wait long to claim a trophy for his effort.

Frenzied teens lining the show's red carpet erupted when the 17-year-old — who wasn't scheduled to appear at the show — arrived in a nondescript SUV. Soon afterward, he was climbing the stage to accept the award for international video of the year by a Canadian, an honour he shared with Toronto rapper Drake.

"I want to say thank you so much to all my fans, you guys are amazing," said Bieber, clad in a pink blazer, white graphic T-shirt and jeans, a pink scarf hanging from his back pocket.

"I love you Toronto."

Lady Gaga opened the show with a tame — by her standard, anyway — take on her latest hit The Edge of Glory, clad in a studded leather jumper, her hair coloured bright turquoise. It was the first of two performances expected from the eccentric Grammy winner, who made headlines with a raunchy performance at the MMVAs two years ago.

She made another MMVA memory early in this show, claiming the award for international video of the year.

"Thank you, I'm so, so happy," said Gaga, who then pointed out that the video's co-director, Laurieann Gibson, was Canadian.

"Always stick by what you believe in. Always stand by your vision. We did it!"

Early winners included Bieber, Vancouver dance-punk outfit You Say Party, former So You Think You Can Dance contestant Blake McGrath, Toronto rapper JDiggz and hard-edged Toronto rockers Abandon All Ships.

Ryan Reynolds is the latest superhero to rule the weekend box office. Green Lantern debuted at No. 1 with $52.7 million, a fair but unremarkable opening stacked up against other comic-book adaptations. The previous weekend's top flick, Super 8, slipped to No. 2 with $21.3 million.

Black Friday for teen singer

Music video Friday that went viral with 160M views is pulled off YouTube Song stars Rebecca Black, 13

Rebecca Black's official Friday music video has been taken off YouTube.

The page where the video starring the 13-year-old singer once played now says it "is no longer available due to a copyright claim by Rebecca Black."

Black's spokesman says her team sent a takedown notice to YouTube because of a dispute over the video with Ark Music Factory, the company Black's parents paid $4,000 to produce the song and video.

Earlier this week, the firm began charging viewers $2.99 to watch the clip.

Lawyers for Black and Ark Music have been haggling over who owns the rights to everything associated with Friday since it became a sensation earlier this year.

The video had amassed more than 160 million views and more than three million "dislikes."

Calgary-based director mixes actors and real-life scenarios in documentary Film offers up positive insights on today's world

A Cynic's Guide to Optimism

CONTRIBUTED

STEVE GOW
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Gary Burns is not your typical filmmaker. Having made award-winning comedies like Waydowntown and The Suburbanators, the Calgary-based director is now gaining notoriety by mixing actors and real-life encounters with the forthcoming documentary The Future is Now!

"The whole idea is you need stars, you've got to get stars in your movie. But [with documentaries], that just goes away; it just melts so once you don't have to worry about that part, filmmaking seems a lot more pleasant."

FILMMAKER GARY BURNS ON FICTION VS. NON-FICTION FILMMAKING

"I thought we were going to get beat up a bit," said Burns of the potential backlash from documentary purists.

"Someone said to me 'explain how this is a documentary' and we're like, 'really?…we're not breaking new ground here; people have been doing this for 50 years."

If you require proof of that, Burns (and co-director Jim Brown) based The Future is Now! on a 1949 French documentary called Life Begins Tomorrow.

As with Burns' movie, the idea is philosophical but the plot is simple.

"It's about a guy who's having a hard time adjusting to the modern world," says Burns.

"A journalist takes him under her wing and introduces him to leading minds in arts and sciences and that's the plot I guess. For us, it's really the idea that it's a taking stock of now as opposed to projecting (the future)."

As such, the cynic (and moviegoer) are introduced to real-life thinkers like innovative architect Shigeru Ban and artist Marlene Dumas to provide optimistic insights on today's world.

"(The film is) heavily scripted. You don't know what the experts are going to say but you have a pretty good idea," said Burns while admitting making a film with the sub-heading A Cynic's Guide to Optimism was not a total breeze.

"It was tough for us to take the optimist line…It's so much easier of course to be the cynic. It's very easy to look at something and go, 'this sucks and I'll show you why' but to take the opposite steps is actually a lot harder."

Does Jewel have the next reality jewel?

Artist is at centre of new show that's in the vein of Project Runway, Top Chef Platinum Hit pulls the curtain back on the craft behind genre-jumping songwriting

AMBER RAY

Jewel is looking for snipers. Marksmen of the musical variety, that is.

In the new series Platinum Hit, the artist, along with former American Idol judge Kara DioGuardi, is searching for the writer behind the next song you just can't get out of your head.

"We're looking for hit men who can write for Carrie Underwood, then write for Ke$ha," Jewel says of the genre-jumping competition airing on MuchMoreMusic on Sundays.

Platinum Hit airs Sundays on MuchMoreMusic

"Not every hit songwriter does that, but we're trying to make (the contestants) as competitive as possible. If they're going to feed their family on songwriting, they need to have a lot in their tool belt."

Though a 12-time platinum seller herself with Pieces of You, Jewel admits she "didn't really know 'songwriter' was a career option," even as she went on to become one of the most recognizable singer-songwriters of the '90s.

"You can make millions off of one hit, just one gig," she explains, "and most people don't know about that."

In the vein of Project Runway and Top Chef, Platinum Hit pulls back the curtain on an industry that demands artistry, delving into contestants' backstories as their creativity is put to the test in weekly challenges.

"It's so educational to watch this show and see what it takes to be the best in the business," Jewel says. "I'm so glad to be part of a show that puts a serious light on a craft that I care about."

No faking

- Throughout the course of taping Platinum Hit, Jewel was thoroughly impressed with the talent on display during each of the shows challenges.
- "When you're asked to come up with a product, something unique, in such a short amount of time, you have to have a lot of skills," she says.
- Any songwriting rules she stressed? "Be authentic. Be real. We can tell — the audience can tell — when you're faking it. It just doesn't move you emotionally," she says.

Megan Fox admits her and husband Brian Austin Green's visit to Hawaii this month could lead to the couple renewing their vows — something she wouldn't have considered before.

"I didn't think that I was into it until my relationship with Brian," she tells E! News.

"He's very sensitive and very emotional. He's a Cancer so he's very all about feelings and relationships and he cries about everything. He'll want to do it, so I'll do it for him."

Fox also revealed plans for a swim with dolphins during the trip, despite Green's reservations. "My husband is terrified of sharks but we're going to do it anyway," she says.

"I didn't used to be [scared of sharks], but I am now because of him. His fear is so intense, it's smothered me and now I'm afraid."

The divorce syndrome

Earlier this month, researcher Hyun Sik Kim of the University of Wisconsin-Madison, released an eye-opening study Children of divorced parents often fall behind their classmates in math and social skills We talk to Kim about the possible long-term impact

SAM CASTONE
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS

THINKSTOCK.COM

"Children of divorce would not want others to know," researcher Hyun Sik Kim says.

You studied children during the first two years after the divorce. Why is that period so crucial?
I studied that period mainly due to data availability — information was available only up to spring of fifth grade, although now, information up to eighth grade is available, which enables me to extend my analyses. But one of the main controversies around divorce is whether children of divorce catch up with children from intact families some time after divorce. That's why it was very important to examine development of children of divorce after divorce occurs.

What surprised you the most?
That I failed to find negative impacts of divorce in the pre-divorce stage. People tend to think that couples go through intense marital conflict before they decide to divorce — otherwise why choose to divorce? And it's widely accepted that children under parents' marital discord experience developmental setbacks, such as retardation in cognitive skills and high frequency of problem behaviours. However, my study finds that there is no differential growth in the pre-divorce stage.

Yet you found their social skills were stunted?
I found that children of divorce lagged behind children from intact families in the growth of interpersonal social skills in the during-divorce stage. Why, I can only speculate. One possibility is that children of divorce go through emotional problems, which is consistent with my finding that children of divorce experienced problems in internalizing their problem behaviours. Another reason may be related to stigma attached to parental divorce, so that children of divorce would not want others to know their own situations, which may lead to less frequent interactions with others. It should also be added that these behaviours were reported by teachers.

Do you have any good news for children of divorce?
I found that development of children of divorce did not worsen in the post-divorce stage even though they did not catch up with children from intact families. In other words, children of divorce developed as similarly as children from intact families in the post-divorce stage.

Divorce is so common these days. Do you think, eventually, anti-social behaviour and low math scores will be the norm for most kids? In other words, will we have to redefine what we expect from children?
This is really a hard question to answer from my study. One very important finding in my study is that children from intact families suffer more compared to children of divorce if the former children were in families plagued by marital conflicts. In this case, we can predict positive effects of divorce for those children. But remember, I just examined children two years after divorce. I cannot at all predict how children of divorce develop until they become adults.

Rising trends

The American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers often polls its members about what they've seen or done lately. Here's what they said.

- 81% Of those polled said they use social media evidence (like Facebook posts) to help win a divorce case for clients.
- 48% Have seen a spike in couples going to court, rather than settling civilly.
- 40% saw a downturn in their business three years back, when the recession hit and folks put divorces on hold.

Preparation:

1. Rub inside of fondue pot with garlic clove. Pour in wine and bring to a boil; reduce to low heat. Add Emmenthal and Gruyere cheeses. Stir gently in a figure-eight pattern to avoid lumps. Add drops of lemon juice if cheese does not blend in easily.
2. Mix together cornstarch and kirsch until smooth; stir into cheese mixture. Season with pepper and nutmeg while stirring until smooth.
3. Place fondue pot over tabletop burner and serve with bread.
4. Using fondue forks, dip bread cubes in fondue. Stir occasionally to keep fondue smooth. When fondue pot is nearly empty, layer of lightly browned cheese will form on bottom. Scrape with wooden spatula for real connoisseurs.

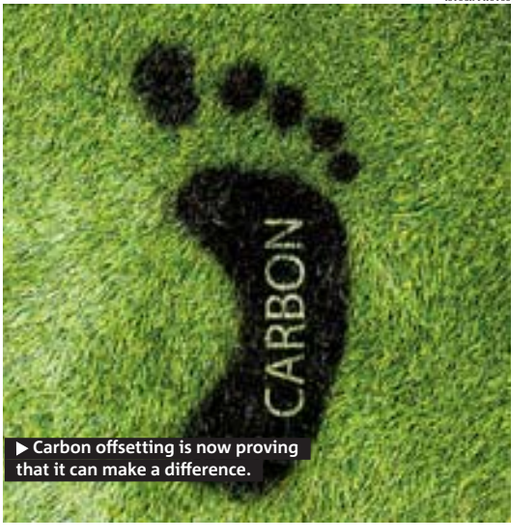
Turning others on to offsetting

Canadian company helping save African lives with a CO2 cuts program ◐ Find out what you can do to help

BEN KNIGHT
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

ISTOCK PHOTOS



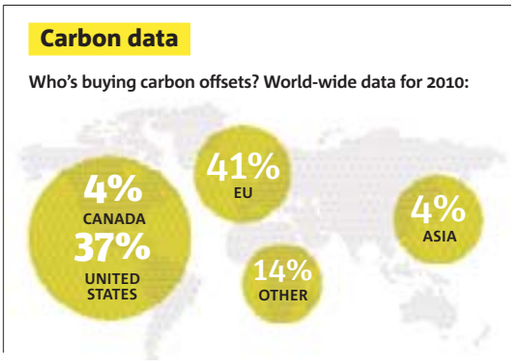
▶ Carbon offsetting is now proving that it can make a difference.

Carbon offsets — money paid by eco-conscious companies for carbon emissions they have not been able to reduce — are now being used to save lives in the developing world.

Offsetters, a Vancouver-based provider of carbon-management solutions, has become the first Canadian company involved in offering a high-quality cookstove program in Africa.

"The big appeal of these projects is that the carbon benefits are very clear," says James Tansey, CEO of Offsetters. "The side benefits of doing this are, in some ways, even more important."

The new stoves are bound for Uganda, where most cooking is done indoors, burning wood, garbage or whatever waste materials are available. This is such a dirty method, installing the new stoves will be like removing 4,000 cars from the world's roads. The potential health benefits are startling.



"Indoor air quality is one of the largest causes of child mortality — more significant than malaria," Tansey notes. "So this project leads not only to reductions, but also very significant improvements in health and well-being."

This is green policy at its best. A world-wide effort to reduce CO2 emissions in the air — through the purchase of carbon offsets — leads directly to safer, longer lives in Africa.

"For these kinds of projects, companies that are reducing their emissions within their operations put a price on carbon," explains Tansey.

"They're paying maybe $20 a ton for the carbon emissions they can't reduce. That money is then pooled, and used to subsidize the cost of the cookstoves."

Offsets come in two kinds: a voluntary market, and one demanded by eco-friendly legislation.

"The global market is around $113-million in voluntary transactions. The regulated market, which is also something we work in — particularly in Europe — is hundreds of millions of dollars in transactions."

TERESA KRUZE
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

They call her Dynamo Betty.

At the age of 79, Betty Ford is one of the top sales people at ArrKann RV and Trailer in Edmonton and is showing no signs of slowing down.

Ford has worked since she was 13 years old in numerous office and sales jobs.

She taught Dale Carnegie courses and sold high-end condos. She was 69 when a former sales manager gave her a call.

"Ford, you're dying on the vine." Betty recalls him saying. "I want you come and sell RV's with me." Now after 10 successful years at her job Betty is facing another turning point in life. She promised ArrKann she'd stay with them until she turned 80. With her birthday in August fast approaching she is now planning on moving to Courtney, B.C. to be closer to her family. Does that mean she'll quit work?

"I already have four job offers," Betty tells me with a chuckle. "I'm going to miss all my friends but there's a whole new adventure out there and I'm going to find it."

Go get 'em, Dynamo Betty.

Betty Ford is showing no signs of slowing down.

When ‘hey bud’ turns into ‘hey boss’

A promotion can be painful when the lucky employee loses friends over the switch Here’s how to handle it

DREW HINSHAW
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

It’s hard to say who to feel sorrier for: the co-worker who misses out on a big promotion, or the unlucky knave who gets it.

Officemates who watch their old friend move up a floor often lose hope, career counsellors note — as if their career is dog-paddling in place.

But the newly-crowned boss? They lose friendships, embark on a life of solitary lunches without that exhilarating sprit of workplace camaraderie.

“Most everyone does it wrong, and it becomes a total disaster,” executive coach Cynthia Shapiro says.

“You lose all your friends. It’s a serious issue and it’s very common.”

But it doesn’t have to be. Here’s how to handle that transition when one workplace pauper becomes the new company prince.

Going from Worker to Boss

New boss task number one, Shapiro says, isn’t to strongarm your old equals into respecting — or worse, fearing — you. It’s to make them comfortable with the uneasy arrangement.

“Don’t come in and tell them what to do — you’re not above them,” she cautions. “The first thing you want to do is ask ‘What can I do for you? What can be done better? What can I do to make your work better?’ Make sure they know you advocating for them.” That doesn’t mean, however, that you should get too chummy.

“You don’t want to be on either end of the spectrum,” says Meredith Haberfeld, founder of the Institute for Coaching. “Don’t be getting drunk after work with who used to be your peers or start acting like you’re above them. Be yourself.”

And don’t downplay your promotion, either, she adds.

“Fake humility is thin veneer, and people can see right through it.”

When Your Friend Becomes the Boss

Watching an old pal become your overseer can boil up a pot of resentments, Shapiro notes, but it really shouldn’t.

“Your friend is now the person in charge of whether you get a raise, what your job security is like,” he says. “That’s a great place to be.”

Make sure you express that, too, she adds.

“You definitely always want to say ‘I’m really happy for you,’ just so they know you’re not feeling threatened,” she states.

And if you are feeling threatened? Grow up.

“Keep your eye on the prize,” Haberfeld says. “Give yourself one weekend to go have a drink, be pissed off, talk to your family, and then wrap it up in a bow and leave it alone.”

‘How ‘bout adding on another zero’?

You’ve landed your first big gig but the salary isn’t suiting you Do you keep your mouth shut or negotiate?

Jobs can be hard to come by, especially for recent college or university graduates with limited experience. So what happens when that first offer comes in and the salary or benefits aren’t quite what you expected?

Many people’s inclination is to accept it anyway.

“Given the job market, there’s not much available. People are really excited to get anything,” said Jillian Berman, who graduated from the University of Michigan this spring and has a paid internship this summer with a news outlet.

Taking what’s offered is the safe route for those entering the job market for the first time.

“Employers these days are feeling a little bit of entitlement,” said Robert Orndorff, associate director of Career Services at Pennsylvania State University.

Each student’s situation is different, of course, and the first thing career counsellors do when a student comes in with a job offer is to ask a lot of questions, Orndorff said. How badly does the student really want this position? Does it match their values? Is it something they’d love to do? Are there any other job prospects? Are they willing to move back in with mom and dad if this offer falls through? How much risk is the student willing to take?

As for negotiations, “There’s not going to be a lot of room if there isn’t a lot of experience,” cautioned Jack Chapman, author of Negotiating Your Salary: How to Make $1,000 a Minute (Mount Vernon Press).

But that doesn’t necessarily mean you shouldn’t try, depending on how much risk you can tolerate.

Those willing to take a risk often take a hard line: I’d like the job, but I need more money.

The danger is that the employer can just turn to other candidates, Orndorff said.

At Penn State, he said, students generally are advised to pursue a softer approach, telling the employer they intend to take the job but would like to be paid more, and then outlining the reasons. Be specific, he advised.

A third option is for students to ask a potential employer if they’d be willing to reconsider salary after six months or so. John Challenger, CEO of the outplacement firm Challenger, Gray and Christmas, calls that a “very reasonable approach.”

“Get the job, go to work and prove yourself,” he said. “Then ask for a raise because of your track record.”

Meet the man with the iron wardrobe

Metro chats with Wang Kang, a 25-year-old whose slightly unorthodox office attire is causing quite the stir

An ordinary office day may be boring, but it might cheer you up when you find out that your colleague is a superhero. A telecoms company employee, Wang Kang stunned his office colleagues and boss in Shanghai, China, when he strutted into the office in his homemade Iron Man suit on June 3.

Wang, age 25, told Metro that his Iron Man MK 1 suit is made of high-density foam, wires and tubes and then painted the colour of aged iron. It took three months and 3,000 yuan ($465) to finish this 50 kg armor costume.

What inspired you to make this Iron Man suit? I have been a crazy fan since the first Iron Man film was released in 2008, and I like doing handmade stuff. I thought it would be so cool if I could make Iron Man armor so simply. Maybe I just wanted to be cool at the beginning. But it's much cooler than I thought after I finished it.

How did you feel when you walked into the office like that? I felt so cool and excited when I walked into the office with this Iron Man suit on, and some of my colleagues didn't recognize me and even got scared of me. It was great fun that people saw me as if I was a real superhero. Then I was so happy that everyone praised my effort, even my boss complimented me.

Has this Iron Man suit changed your life? I never thought I could be famous because of it, now I have become very busy replying to all kinds of emails and messages from my own fans, which I enjoy. In fact many women want to know me and be my girlfriend, because they think I am a creative and interesting guy. And the other day, I received an email from The Embassy VFX Team, the visual effects company that created the Mk 1 sequence for Iron Man film. They think I am great to make such a suit, that was just an incredible experience.

How long does it take to put this suit on? Is it easy to move in this suit? With someone's help, it takes about four or five minutes to put it on. It has a skeleton-like frame inside, so it is not so heavy to move. I can't dance but I can go to the toilet by myself with this suit on.

What is the hardest part during your making process? Before this suit, I made lots of models of Iron Man. Actually I spent the last three years getting used to making things with my hands with the goal of making this suit. But it was a boring and lonely thing to do, because everyday when I finished work, I would have to start working on the costume. It was a big challenge on my perseverance. There was one time I got sick, because the painting material was toxic.

Do you plan to make profit out of this Iron Man suit? How much would you sell it? I just do it for fun not for profit. I think it would be very expensive because the making process was so complicated and time-consuming.

Major domination by McIlroy

Irishman erases Masters collapse, wins U.S. Open in record fashion

Every time Rory McIlroy lined up a shot yesterday, there was some sort of record on the line, some kind of history to be made.

That was this year's U.S. Open version of suspense. There was never any doubt that the kid from Northern Ireland was going to win it.

In complete control of his emotions and his game, McIlroy never slipped. He won his first major championship by shooting a 2-under 69 at Congressional and closed his four-day onslaught at 16-under 268, eight shots ahead of Jason Day and four shots better than the U.S. Open scoring record formerly held by four players, including two named Woods and Nicklaus.

After the final tap-in, Gerry McIlroy met his son as he walked off the green.

"Happy Father's Day," the new champion said.

Happy Father's Day, indeed.

All week, McIlroy's performance was compared to Tiger Woods' 15-shot blowout at Pebble Beach in 2000.

"I was trying to go out there today and emulate him in some way," McIlroy said. "I played great for four days and I couldn't be happier."

The win comes two months after a collapse so thorough, some wondered if McIlroy could recover. He took a four-shot lead into the final day of the Masters, but after hitting his 10th tee shot near a cabin on the grounds of Augusta National, he melted down, shot 80 and finished 15th.

"I think this kid's going to have a great career. I don't think there's any question about it. He's got all the components."
GOLF LEGEND JACK NICKLAUS IN AN INTERVIEW WITH NBC

His shot on the 10th hole yesterday wasn't comparable. On the 214-yard par-3, a downhill shot over water, McIlroy knocked the ball above the hole, then watched as it stopped for a split second and started spinning backward before stopping an inch or two from the hole.

He tapped in for a birdie that got him to 17-under par at a tournament that had never seen a score lower than 12 under before Friday.

"That was the point in the round that I really felt it was mine to lose," McIlroy said.

McIlroy now owns the scoring records for 36, 54 and 72 holes at the toughest test in golf and he became only the third player to break 70 in all four rounds of the U.S. Open.

Canada's Findlay wins yet another triathlon

Edmonton's Paula Findlay edged Helen Jenkins by four seconds to win the triathlon world series event in Kitzbuehel, Austria, yesterday and extend her lead at the top of the overall standings.

Findlay finished in 2:05:52.

"I'm thrilled again. Wow, that was a real hard race. I was running maximum the whole way," she said.

Findlay had emerged from the swim more than a minute down on the leaders, Jenkins and Sarah Haskins. She caught Jenkins at the end of the fourth bike leg.

Findlay leads the world series with 2,400 points. The win is her fifth in six races over the last 11 months. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bruins feted at Fenway

The Boston Red Sox honoured the Stanley Cup champion Bruins with a 15-minute on-field ceremony before yesterday's baseball game against the Milwaukee Brewers.

Members of the Bruins, who captured the cup with a Game 7 win over Vancouver Wednesday, rode in on four Duck Boats. As they entered, Bruins players, dressed in their black jerseys, threw soft baseballs and pucks to the fans in Fenway Park, many of whom wore Bruins jerseys. Red Sox employees waved Bruins flags in a ring around the upper seating park.

When they finished the loop on the boats, the players got off and — led by captain Zdeno Chara carrying the cup — walked into the infield for a ceremonial first pitch to members of the Red Sox.

Reds end scoreless streak against Blue Jays

- Miguel Cairo's two-run blast good enough for win against Toronto
- Bronson Arroyo reverses fortunes against Jays for eight strong innings

▶ Jay Bruce steals second base ahead of the tag by Aaron Hill at Great American Ball Park yesterday in Cincinnati.

Miguel Cairo hit a two-run homer in the sixth off Carlos Villanueva, stopping Cincinnati's streak of 16 scoreless innings, and the Reds got their first win over an American League team this season, beating the Toronto Blue Jays 2-1 yesterday.

The Reds had dropped their previous five interleague games against Cleveland and Toronto.

Bronson Arroyo (6-6) ended his streak of dismal days against the Blue Jays. The right-hander gave up five hits, including Aaron Hill's homer, in a season-high eight innings. Arroyo had lost his last three starts and five straight decisions against Toronto.

Villanueva (4-1) lost for the first time since Aug. 17, 2009, with Milwaukee, where he was a reliever the last two years.

The Toronto Blue Jays signed shortstop Yunel Escobar to a two-year contract extension yesterday worth $10 million US. He will earn $5 million in 2012 and 2013.

Francisco Cordero pitched the ninth for his 15th save in 17 tries. He moved one ahead of Jeff Montgomery for sole possession of 19th on the career list with 305 saves. Hall of Famer Goose Gossage is next at 310.

First baseman Joey Votto had three hits after failing to reach base in the first two games of the series. The Toronto native received the Lou Marsh Trophy before Saturday's game. The award honours him as Canada's top athlete for 2010.

Four men primed and ready at Wimbledon

Having won four of the past five Grand Slam tournaments and 10 in all, Rafael Nadal was asked on the eve of Wimbledon about quickly closing in on Roger Federer's record of 16.

Nadal cut in to clarify.

"Very close? No. I am very far," Nadal said yesterday. "Six is a lot."

Perhaps. Still, the 25-year-old Spaniard is looking more and more like someone who will be able to challenge, if not surpass, whatever Federer's final tally is. As long as a couple of other guys don't get in the way, that is.

For years, Federer and Nadal were the men to beat at major tournaments. These days, they're joined at what is a competitive and compelling top of the game by a pair of 24-year-olds, Novak Djokovic and Andy Murray.

That Big Four filled out the semifinals at the French Open two weeks ago, and most everyone expects them to be the final four standing in a fortnight's time at Wimbledon, where play begins today with Nadal as the defending champion.

"That's maybe something that's a bit different than maybe in the past, where maybe one of the top four guys wouldn't feel so comfortable on grass," said Federer, a six-time winner at Wimbledon. "But this year, it seems like all of us are, which is a good thing."

U.S. through to Gold Cup semis

Jermaine Jones scored in the 49th minute and Clint Dempsey added a goal in the 80th in the United States' 2-0 victory over Jamaica yesterday in the CONCACAF Gold Cup quarter-finals.

The United States will face Panama in Wednesday's semifinal in Houston.

Jones fired a shot from outside the penalty area and Jamaica defender Jermaine Taylor stuck out his foot, deflecting the ball past goalkeeper Donovan Ricketts.

Taylor came out on the losing end of another exchange nearly 20 minutes later. Jones beat the defence in the middle of Jamaica's half and was about to break free for a 1-on-1 chance when Taylor tackled him from behind, earning a red card. With Jamaica down a man, Dempsey added the second goal with 10 minutes to play. Juan Agudelo's cross found Dempsey at the left side of the goal. Ricketts came out to contest, and Dempsey avoided the tackle and put the ball in the open net.

MILWAUKEE MILE

Franchitti races to third win of season

Dario Franchitti took over the lead when Helio Castroneves had a tire problem, then held on to win the IndyCar Series race at the Milwaukee Mile yesterday.

It was the third victory of the season for Franchitti, who stayed out of trouble as two fellow contenders fell by the wayside. Tony Kanaan crashed with 31 laps to go, and Castroneves gave up the lead when he had to make a late extra pit stop to change a tire that was going flat.

Castroneves fell all the way to ninth place.

Toronto rookie James Hinchcliffe was sixth, while fellow Canadian Alex Tagliani of Lachenaie, Que., finished 18th.

REAL TESTIMONIALS
In Latin America we very much believe in good and evil. The evil doing that was done to separate us was from his mother that never liked me. With black magic she separated us for a while but thanks to god and the shaman we are now together again.
